

from our forward contracts with Chinese for delivery in Sandakan.

Mr. Wickham—Didn't they refuse to take delivery because it was not according to their orders? Where was the wood to come from?

Mr. Abrahamson—That is not so—the producers were at Sandakan. There has been a good deal said about the vendors to this Company having no right to make such a charge for the good will, and on the face of it it does appear so, but when you look into the actual facts you will see that the vendors took $100,000 in fully paid-up shares, besides a lot more fully and part-paid shares, and they now possess some $200,000 worth, out of the total of $400,000 paid up.

Mr. Wickham—We bought your business as a going concern, and the last year's account shows a loss of $30,000.

Mr. Abrahamson—I don't see it.

Mr. Wickham—Several items from last year's balance sheet, closing with the remark that $100,000 was modest for the good-will.

Mr. Abrahamson—But you didn't pay it, and there is no loss, according to last year's account. The Chairman—Order.

Mr. Abrahamson—I am not going to argue.

Mr. Wickham—You can't deny it—you can't.

Mr. Francis questioned the accuracy of last year's account.

The Chairman—You can't go into that now.

Mr. Abrahamson—Before this Company was formed the business paid very good dividends for several years—12 and 15 per cent—on a very much smaller capital.

Mr. Wickham—Yes, on a small capital, but not when you made it a capital of $300,000 or $400,000.

Mr. Abrahamson—I can't take any notice of your remarks.

The Chairman again called Mr. Wickham to order.

Mr. Abrahamson—I shall call the Committee with very great satisfaction, and if you will elect some unprejudiced shareholders I think the result will be beneficial to both myself and the general agents, for then you will see that although we have been unfortunate we could not avoid it.

The amendment was then put, and carried by 14 to ten, and Mr. Francis, Mr. Wickham, and Mr. Fenwick were nominated to act as a Consulting Committee.

Mr. Francis proposed the adjournment of the meeting for a fortnight, which was agreed to, and after a vote of thanks to the Chairman had been proposed by Mr. Wickham the proceedings terminated.

OUR UNOFFICIAL LEGISLATORS.

AN APPEAL FOR FAIR PLAY.

A special meeting of the Finance Committee of the Legislative Council was held in the Council Chamber this afternoon, at half-past two o'clock. There were present:—Mr. W. M. Deane (Acting Colonial Secretary, President), Mr. S. Brown (Surveyor-General), Mr. H. E. Wodehouse (Acting Colonial Treasurer), Mr. N. J. Mitchell (Registrar-General), Messrs. C. P. Chatter, H. T. Whitehead, P. Ryrie, and Ho Kai (unofficial members) and Mr. F. H. Hazeland, Acting Clerk of Councils.

The minutes of the last meeting of the committee were read and confirmed.

The Chairman—The first vote is for $77,012, appropriation for the Public Works Department.

Mr. Ryrie—I beg to propose that we adopt the mode of procedure in vogue at Finance Committee meetings of the Singapore Council.

There, when unofficial members are opposed, as we were at the last meeting, by the official members, the unofficials are allowed time to reconsider the matter before the question at issue is put to the vote. We are often told that the Singapore Council does this, and the Ceylon Council does the other. Now let us, for once at any rate, do what is done in Singapore under similar circumstances. We are not satisfied with the Estimates, and would like to have time to reconsider the matter.

The Chairman—What are the terms of your motion?

Mr. Ryrie—I've stated it. It is that the unofficial members should have time to reconsider the matter.

The Chairman—I must overrule that motion as out of order.

Mr. Ryrie—I submit it is in order.

The President—As this is simply a meeting of the Finance Committee I must object. Had you made the proposition at a Council meeting I should not have raised the objection as being out of order.

Mr. Ryrie—Well, in that case we have nothing else to do but vote against everything that is proposed. But in view of that I propose an adjournment until Monday, after the regular Council meeting.

Mr. Ho Kai—I beg to second that.

The Chairman—I understand that the honourable member on my right wishes to propose something affecting the mode of procedure for the conduct of Finance Committee, I therefore propose an adjournment; and if there are no objections we shall adjourn until Monday.

There being no dissenting voice the Committee adjourned accordingly.

THE GINSENG PLANT.

Proposals have been made in America to cultivate the ginseng plant, so largely used in Chinese medical practice, for exportation to the "Middle Kingdom." In one sense there is an inducement for ginseng root, one fine root worth $1,000 a pound in the market at Peking and Canton. Ginseng is interesting in another respect; it is the basis of the Chinese elixir of life.

In the botanical description of the plant it is referred to as the allacace—herbaceous or trees having the general characteristics of the umbelliferae, but differing in respect to the fruit, which always consists of more than two carpels and is in the form of a drupe. Amalia quinquefolia, the panax quinquefolium of Linnaeus, is an herbaceous perennial, with large and spindle-shaped root. The stem is about a foot high, bearing at its summit a whorl of three palmately (3 to 7), foliate leaves and a single umbel; leaflets obovate-oblong, acuminate; peduncles naked, slender, as long as the petioles; flowers yellowish-green, appearing in July. In North America the habitat of the plant is in rich upland woods, from Canada to the mountains of the Southern States. The valley of the Ohio is particularly favored, but there is no systematic cultivation.

The familiar term panacea, meaning a remedy for all diseases, is sufficiently obvious in the botanical appellation of ginseng, namely panax quinquefolium. The Chinese have used it in medical practice for centuries, and it is a curious circumstance that while European and American resident physicians, in declaring that the ginseng root has no active medicinal properties whatever, the natives of Korea, Japan, Chinese Tartary and Tibet all attribute to it the most wonderful virtues. The Chinese import 27,000 pounds a year of the root from Korea alone, and another 500,000 pounds is annually imported from the United States. In Korea ginseng is raised from seed. The seedlings are planted out and frequently transplanted, and maturity is reached in five years. In the ordinary way the ginseng is prepared for commercial exportation by drying the root over a charcoal fire.

There is no other plant, not even the Jesuit's bark, which furnishes quinine or the poppy, which yields opium, of which it can be truly said that it is worth its weight in gold, as is the ginseng of Korea. The American product is probably identical in all respects, but it does not command the price. Even within the past year American ginseng root has fallen from $1.60 to about 60 cents a pound in Chinatown, but the Korean article is still a royal monopoly of the most valuable character. Almost every medicine used by the Chinese contains ginseng, which is variously spoken of as "pure spirit of the earth" and the "plant that gives immortality." In Chinese Tartary it is collected with many precautions at the beginning of spring and the end of autumn, and even this product, though less esteemed than the Korean, is estimated to be worth three times its weight in silver. An early traveler records that the Emperor of China employed in one year 10,000 Tartars in procuring the root. From China it was formerly exported to Japan, where it was obtained by the Dutch, who first introduced it into Europe.

Ginseng has a curious and historical connection with the relations of the United States and China as the tea chests which the "Painted Infants" pitched into Boston harbor had with the severance of the United States from Great Britain. The Manchurian ginseng was literally worth its weight in gold in the Chinese markets a century and a half ago, and the annual embassy from Seoul, in Korea, produced a golden harvest for the Korean merchants. The Dutch merchants at Albany and throughout New England became aware, through the Indians, that the precious plant grew abundantly on the hills around Stockbridge, in Massachusetts. The root was shipped in Dutch galliots down the Hudson, thence to Amsterdam and London, where cargoes were sold to the East India Company at a profit of 500 per cent. The American ginseng broke the market for a time, but the price rallied after a while, and since then a steady stream of ginseng has been exported to China from the Ohio and Mississippi valleys, where it is found in limitless quantities. It was Captain Shaw, an American citizen, the first Consul of the United States to China, who shut out the British-taxed tea and declared that "Americans must have tea and they seek the most lucrative market for their precious root ginseng."

There is not a single book of travel of ancient date, which does not make reference to the extraordinary medical value attributed by the Chinese to ginseng, and even the custom of making presents of it at stated seasons, as Europeans and Caucasians would offer jewels and other valuables at Christmas and New Year, is evidence of its universal appreciation. Osbeck, in his travels, says he never looked into the apothecary's shops without finding them selling ginseng alike to poor people and those of the highest rank. "They commonly," he says, "boil half an ounce of the root with their tea and sup it as a remedy in consumption and other diseases." Jartoux relates that the most eminent officials of China have written volumes on the medicinal properties of this plant, stating that it gives immediate relief in extreme fatigue either of body or mind; dissolves pituitous humors and renders respiration easy; strengthens the stomach, promotes hysteria, hypochondria and nervous affections and gives vigorous tone to the body even in extreme old age.

The vital elixir of Peking is so much in demand to do more, but it is noteworthy that while modern physicians resident in China deny the ginseng any other value than as a demulcent and diaphoretic, surpassed in both respects by many other drugs, travelers in China tell a very different story. After pointing out that the Chinese knowledge of chemistry far antedates any historic records in Europe or America, Huc quotes his own experiences of the effects of a dose of ginseng, compounded in some manner unknown to him and strongly flavored with male, in universal Chinese fashion. He was suffering at the time from vomiting, with acute pains in the head and stomach. There were other symptoms suggestive of bilious dysentery. The Chinese doctor asked for half a cup of tea and threw into it about a dozen minute red pills. Huc drank the tea, and immediately noticed an improvement in his symptoms. The improvement went on all the next day, when having taken another cup with six globules of the ginseng extract, the malady had disappeared. There were no convulsions, nor head-aches, nor pains in the stomach. One of the circumstances which makes it very probable, if not certain, that ginseng enters largely into the composition of the pills is the fact that these pills are considered "panacea," and are called "ling-pao yong-tan," that is to say, "supernatural treasure for all diseases"; also, that the patient, after taking the pills, commonly breaks out into a profuse perspiration, this being a recognized property of ginseng. Other medical men who have tested the properties of the genuine Chinese ginseng affirm that it is a powerful aphrodisiac, but this has not been confirmed in the case of the ginseng exported from this country.

The form of the ginseng root probably contributes considerably to the Chinese notion that supernatural virtues are inherent in it. Fragments selected miscellaneous from a heap of the roots bear a singular resemblance to the human body and limbs, to the os-sacrum, the headless trunk and individual members. The Chinese name "ginseng" is derived from this circumstance.

In the Northern, Middle and Western States, where the ginseng plant is grown for exportation, it is found to prefer a light sandy or loamy soil, with a sheltered situation. Ohio, West Virginia and Michigan are the chief States in which the plant is collected in any considerable quantities, and it receives but little active cultivation. When dried the root is yellowish white, and wrinkled externally. Within it consists of a hard central portion, surrounded by a soft whitish bark. It has a feeble odor and a sweet, slightly aromatic taste somewhat like that of liquorice root. It is rich in gum and starch, and contains albumen. There is no doubt that the ginseng plant could be easily cultivated in California; in fact, that it would grow freely without cultivation of any sort. But what it could be profitably grown for exportation is doubtful, the existing supply in the Middle States being already in excess of the demand, as shown by the recent fall in price. Korean and Chinese native ginseng maintain their high prices, however, and the contention is that they have virtues which the American product does not possess.—S. F. Chronicle.

THE SHIP AND IMMORALITY.

Devotion to duty is at all times praiseworthy. When it takes the form of self-sacrifice for the protection of innocence it is heroic. Two Brooklyn school principals, watchful ever of the safety of the lambs entrusted to their keeping, have neglected their summer rest, and toiled through the long vacation in order to mark a safe path through literature for the youths under their care. The books not for children's reading are known and easily avoided. To name them takes expurgation from school libraries were the task of a tyro. But those others that like insidious fever eat the blood, inflame the imagination, and turn the thoughts of the pure and young into things unclean and books that only strong minds can digest without harm, is the work of a master. And these protectors of purity have attempted the school. They declare that Longfellow should be excluded from the public schools. And they point to The Building of the Ship as containing lines no school girl can read without it raising impure thoughts. The objectionable lines are:—

She starts,—she moves, she seems to feel,
The thrill of life along her keel;
And, spurning with her foot the ground,
With one exulting, joyous bound,
She leaps into the ocean's arms!

"Take her, O, bridegroom, old and gray;
Take her to thy protecting arms
With all her youth and all her charms."

And this our pedagogic friends fear will taint the innocent mind. Mayhap they are right. These are those possibly so utterly depraved as to find evil in the Hymn to the Night, or a refrain from the devil in the Drinking Song. But Brooklyn schoolmasters should not stop here. They have made a discovery unknown to themselves, perhaps, yet greater than that of the suggestiveness of the poet's verse. The lines they point out show wherein the ship itself must have been, in order and will continue to be unless pedagogic authority steps in to prevent, a corrupter of youth! As woman is held typical of charm and beauty, of graceful movement and glowing life, man has feminized the ship that "walks the water like a thing of life," but in so doing what a pitfall has been made for the pure and young. Whether in the poet's song or in the more prosaic talk of commerce, this is an insidious thing, this mixture of iron and wood and cloth, and the suggestion of a woman, and a woman in all her freaks, in all her moods, in all her anatomy "so naked and bare." The thought is dreadful. When the sailor takes his child upon his knee and describes the ship that carried him safe across the seas, a blush of shame should mantle his cheek when he tells of her knees and ribs, of her waist and stays, of breast hooks and stern posts, of her plunging into the very bottom of Neptune, of her rolling gait and her natty ways! Is not here work for a thousand schoolmasters to stamp out all this and not to change, but remove entirely, the gender of this demoralizing craft. When these good men consider the evil contained in a shipbuilding, in all the item describing the repairs of a vessel, or worse, in the report of disaster that states the "abandoned Mary Jane has been passed, stripped" they must demand a censorship of the Press that will protect unsuspecting children from such prurient language. As the poet says "Bless thee, Bottom! bless thee! thou art translated!"
